

Jungle Fun – a tale of good brushing and superpowers

Once upon a time, in a faraway jungle, there was a happy, quirky tribe of jungle buddies, who lived in a giant jungle tree. It was split over three floors. The first floor for Leo and Groa. The second for Bim and Bam. And the third for Moh and Zoa.

On most days, the jungle buddies would go out and play – until, one day, something out of the ordinary happened. A mystery object fell from the sky and landed in Moh and Zoa's bathroom. It was wrapped in a mass of tangled lianas, branches and leaves. What on earth could it be?

All the jungle buddies were scared – except for Zoa, who found it very exciting. She asked her buddies if they could help her find out what the mystery object was. “But what if it's alive and wants to eat us?” replied Bim and Bam.

So Zoa started tugging at the branches and lianas alone. Suddenly, something caught her eye. She couldn't believe it. There, in front of her, was a giant tube of toothpaste – and a very unusual toothbrush! They looked nothing at all like the ones the buddies had used before. They were so colourful and fun! Zoa started roaring with laughter. As soon as they heard her, the other buddies started laughing too.

Now they all wanted to open the tube and smell the toothpaste. As they lifted the cap, a mouth-watering scent filled the air. It was unlike anything they'd ever smelled before – a sweet, juicy aroma. They all took turns to stick their noses in and breathe in the smell.

Groa decided to take a closer look at the toothbrush. She stuck her finger out to touch it – and suddenly a new toothbrush appeared in her hand. The same – but just her size. She called the buddies over to show them and soon each one of them was holding a toothbrush of their very own!

Giddy with excitement, they all started brushing their teeth. Then they got into bed and, before they knew it, they were fast asleep, dreaming about their amazing discovery.

The next morning, Zoa caught a glimpse of her smile. Her teeth were so bright and shiny that she could hardly keep her eyes open. Moh appeared: his smile was shiny too. Zoa could see her own reflection in his teeth. They turned off the lights and their smiles lit up the whole room.

They called the other jungle buddies and quickly discovered that they'd also woken up with superpowers. Bim and Bam's teeth had become so strong that they were able to climb up the jungle tree using only their teeth.

And as for Leo and Groa's superpower, their smiles had become so cute and appealing that they could charm any of the animals in the jungle, even the dangerous ones. That morning, they'd smiled at a naughty snake trying to sneak into the tree-house. He blushed, apologised and promised to be a better jungle neighbour.

There could be only one explanation for their new powers: the brushing they'd done the night before had made them extra-special.

"Do you think there were magical strawberries in the toothpaste? Have the toothbrushes got special powers?," asked Leo. They all looked at each other. Everyone in the jungle had heard of the ancient legend that well-brushed teeth gave you superpowers – but until then nobody had known if it was true. Little Leo was right!

From that day onwards, the jungle buddies used their amazing new toothbrushes and the magical strawberry toothpaste to brush their teeth every day – after breakfast and before bed. And every day new superpowers appeared – like being able to run faster, climb higher and jump from tree to tree. And to be sure they kept their powers, the jungle buddies always remembered to brush their teeth twice a day, without fail.

With every new superpower they got stronger and stronger, smarter and smarter, happier and happier.

They made their tree house even more beautiful. They became firm friends with everyone in the jungle. And they had more fun than ever. Forever!
